Field of the Invention The present invention relates to heat exchangers in general, and more particularly to an improved heat exchanger using a plurality of heat transfer tubes and a plurality of groups of fins to more effectively handle corrosive or hot fluids while at the same time minimizing pressure drop. 2. Description of the Prior Art Heat exchangers have been used in the past to heat a gas such as air in a gas turbine engine. These heat exchangers would normally include a cylindrical shell having a plurality of open-ended tubes therein that receive the heated gas from the combustor of the gas turbine engine. In many applications a cool fluid, such as air, is circulated through the tubes and is heated by the heated gas. A plurality of groups of f678ea9f9e
